Grandpa Hedgehog couldn't believe Heino would be outsmarted so easily. Still, he wanted to reward Anne with the best he had.

Listen now, listen and watch carefully as the most important is yet to come. This little thing is magical, child

But they must be worth a lot. I can't take them just like that Magical? What does it do?

That's the problem, my child, nobody knows. This little thing is so old its secret has been lost over time.

Just my luck! What's the use of a wrinkly old lump whose secret has been lost, Grandpa? It's completely useless!

Not exactly, my child. Madame Owl could tell you what to do with this thing

Madame Owl? Who's that?

Madame Owl, my child, is a fortune-teller. They say she can give you advice about anything.

You can get to her by going through the great swamp and then via the meadow with the orchids. They are not nice places, both having a bad reputation, but there is no other route.

Just a last question. Those ... ghosts. Do you know anything about them?

Why do you ask? Leave evil well alone. It's best if we don't even speak of them.

A, before I forgot it ... In this jar there's honey. I collected it myself. It's very sweet.

Well, I met them already. Let me tell you what happened ...

You must be careful not to meet them again because you might not escape a second time. You can't mess around with the ghosts. It's no accident that everyone is afraid of them.

Take care, my child. I'll be missing you!
